House of Representatives

FRIDAY, MARCH 22, 1996

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Through our experiences we are aware, O God, that the events of life contain all the emotions of the human spirit. There are moments of triumph and moments of loss; there are days of glory and days of remorse; there are times of laughter and times of tears; there is the reality of hatred and suspicion and there is the reality of love. In all these experiences, we pray, gracious God, that we will hold to Your forgiving and assuring word, trusting in Your grace and comforted by Your peace. Amen.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize 10 Members on each side for 1-minute speeches.

TRIBUTE TO NYPD OFFICER KEVIN GILLESPIE

(Mr. KING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, in the current film, "City Hall," the fictional mayor of New York City portrayed by Al Pacino says, "There is one thing I will never get over. That is the murder of a police officer." As a Member of Congress, as an American, and as the son of a New York police lieutenant, I could not agree more emphatically with that statement.

Mr. Speaker, this past Monday in my home parish of St. William the Abbot Church in Seaford, I attended the funeral of a police officer, Kevin Gillespie, a New York City police officer that was gunned down in the line of duty last March 14, 1996. Police Officer Gillespie was a cop's cop.

Those who murdered him personified the very worst of the criminal elements in our society. They had been previously convicted of crimes, ranging from attempted murder to assault and armed robbery. The triggerman who fired the 9-millimeter slug into Kevin Gillespie's neck is a two-time violent offender. One of his accomplices was out on $25,000 bail for an armed robbery arrest in January, a crime committed while he was out on parole.

Mr. Speaker, our criminal justice system has lost touch with the American people and is failing in its job.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Governor Pataki for removing the Bronx district attorney for refusing to carry out the death penalty in this case, and I offer my condolences to Officer Gillespie and his family.

Mr. Speaker, in the current film, "City Hall," the fictional mayor of New York City portrayed by Al Pacino says, "as Mayor, there is one thing that I will never get over, that is the murder of a police officer." As a Member of Congress, as an American, and as the son of a New York City police lieutenant, I could not agree more emphatically with that statement.

This Monday in my parish of St. William the Abbot in Seaford, I attended the funeral of a murdered New York City police officer. Highly decorated NYPD Officer Kevin Gillespie was brutally gunned down on the night of March 14, 1996. Officer Gillespie leaves behind his wife Patty and two young sons, Danny, age 7, and Bobby, age 4. A Marine Corps veteran of the gulf war, Kevin Gillespie was recognized by his fellow officers and by the people he served as truly one of "New York's Finest."

Throughout his career, first with the New York City Housing Police and then with the NYPD, Officer Gillespie distinguished himself as a very special cop. Because of his spirit, dedication, and skill, he was selected for the elite street crime unit.

Working with this unit on the night of March 14, Officer Gillespie was killed, and his partner, Terence McAllister, wounded, while attempting to apprehend a gang of three suspected car-jackers traveling in a stolen BMW. The three felons were all on parole. Collectively they had been convicted of a series of crimes ranging from attempted murder to assault and armed robbery. The triggerman who
